Message from the Counselor

Project Ignite is an interdisciplinary project-based 10-week program that takes place on Sundays in the Spring on Carnegie Mellon's campus. High school students work in groups of 5 to 9 to research, design and build large-scale projects with university students who support them to actualize their wildest ideas. High school applications for the Spring are open now, offering projects in tech, science and the arts. Today is the last day to apply! Continue reading to learn more and to fill out your application.
